

PHILOSOPHICAL AND AESTHETIC PROBLEMS OF FORMING A STRONG FAMILY

Rakhmonberdyeva Sitora Yusubbaevna

A second-year doctoral student at the Institute of Family and Gender Studies sitorarahmonberdiyeva878@gmail.com

Abstract: Philosophical and aesthetic issues related to building a strong family are among the most pressing issues in modern society. Family is the most important social structure in the life of every person; its stability and strength are essential not only for personal life but also for the development of society. Numerous philosophical and aesthetic issues arise during the process of family formation. This article presents information on the philosophical and aesthetic aspects of building a strong family, their challenges, and solutions.

Key words: family, philosophical and aesthetic problems, society, life, emotions, education, mutual respect, trust.

Introduction

Family is a vital and integral part of human life, playing a significant role in the personal development and social life of each individual. Families are formed not only through biological ties but also through emotional, spiritual, and social relationships. Relationships between family members are built on a foundation of mutual respect, love, and trust. Family is a person's first social school, where moral values, upbringing, and life experience are learned. The formation of a family begins, first and foremost, with mutual love and trust between two people. The process of building a family is linked not only to personal feelings but also to social and cultural factors. Each family is distinguished by its own traditions, values, and way of life. Relationships within the family are strengthened through mutual communication, understanding, and support. Family members strengthen their relationships by helping each other, solving problems together, and trying to understand each other's feelings.

Analysis of literature on the topic

In modern society, the formation and strength of a family depend on many factors. Economic conditions, the social environment, and cultural traditions influence the relationships between family members. Stress and anxiety in the family can weaken relationships. Therefore, family members need to strive for mutual understanding, joint problem-solving, and mutual support. Family is also associated with social norms and values. Each family is formed on the basis of its own traditions and values in society. Family members must follow social norms and respect each other in their interactions. Relationships within the family are connected with the relationships and traditions in the social environment, which ensure the strength of the family. [1; p. 13] If mutual respect, trust, and love reign between family members, this family will be strong and stable. The beauty and aesthetics of the family environment improve the psychological state of family members and strengthen their relationships. The family is the most important part of a person's life, and its strength and stability influence the development of society. [3; p. 43]

Research methodology

The process of forming a family is based, first and foremost, on the relationships between family members. Family ties, moral values, emotions, and mutual respect are the main factors determining the strength of a family. From a philosophical point of view, a family is a social institution formed on the basis of human relationships and responsibility. Relationships between family members depend on their mutual respect and trust. Love, understanding, and support within the family play a significant role in forming a strong family. [4; p. 102] Aesthetic aspects are also important for forming a strong family. Beauty in a family is reflected not only in appearance but also in the state of mind. A strong family can be formed through the relationships of family members with each other, their emotions, and relationships. An aesthetic environment contributes to the increase of positive emotions in the family. Creating a beautiful and aesthetic environment between family members improves their mental state and strengthens their relationships. Upbringing and education also play a significant role in the process of forming a family. The family is a person's first school. A strong family can be formed through educational processes, teaching moral values, and sharing life experiences among family members. The educational process further strengthens relationships between family members. Teaching children moral values within the family promotes their personal development. This process serves to further strengthen relationships between family members.[5; 54-b]

Analysis and results

Communication is also an important factor in family formation. Open and sincere communication within the family strengthens mutual understanding and helps solve problems. Open communication between family members strengthens their relationships and contributes to the formation of a strong family. When problems arise in the family, strong relationships can be established by solving them together and understanding each other. Communication between family members strengthens their feelings and relationships. The social environment is also important in family formation. Family, as part of society, is bound by social norms and values. Family members build their relationships based on the attitudes and traditions of society.[7; 18-b]

To build a strong family, it is necessary to foster healthy values and traditions within the social environment. If mutual respect, love, and trust reign among family members, the family will be strong and stable. When forming a family, the social environment is the primary factor determining the relationships between its members. During the process of family formation, each person must recognize their responsibility and strive to strengthen mutual respect and trust between family members. Strengthening relationships between family members serves to create a strong family. Family is the most important part of a person's life, and its strength and stability greatly influence the development of society. Therefore, the issue of building a strong family is important for everyone, and it is necessary to work towards this goal.[9; 87-b]

There are also challenges in building a strong family. Issues such as disagreements within the family, lack of communication, and loss of moral values can weaken the family's strength. To address these issues, it is necessary to strengthen mutual understanding between family members, improve communication, and reinforce moral values. When forming a family, each person must recognize their responsibility and strive to build mutual respect and trust between family members. At the same time, the influence of modern technology should also be considered in the process of building a strong family. Today, the internet and social media can change communication between family members. Changes in communication between family members, instead of strengthening their mutual ties, can sometimes increase distance or lead to mutual misunderstanding. Therefore, it is necessary to use modern technology wisely and maintain traditional communication within the family. Philosophical and aesthetic issues in forming a family are reflected in all aspects of a person's life. The family is considered not only the fundamental structure of personal life but also an integral part of social and cultural life. Relationships within the family, moral values, the aesthetic environment, and educational processes are the main factors determining its strength. Therefore, when forming a family, it is necessary to consider philosophical and aesthetic aspects. If there is mutual respect, trust, and love between family members, the family will be strong and stable. When forming a family, each person must recognize their responsibility and strive to strengthen relationships between family members. This is important for improving the family environment and ensuring its stability. Family is the most important part of a person's life, and its strength and stability influence the development of society. Therefore, the issue of forming a strong family is important for everyone, and it is necessary to act in this direction. [6: 65-b]

The economic and social conditions of society also play an important role in the process of family formation. Economic difficulties can negatively affect relationships within the family. Stress and anxiety among family members can weaken them. Therefore, ensuring economic stability during the process of family formation helps to improve the psychological well-being of family members. Social conditions are also important for family formation. A healthy social environment is necessary for strengthening relationships between family members and forming a strong family. In the process of family formation, it is also important to strengthen mutual understanding between them. Open and sincere communication within the family enhances mutual understanding and helps solve problems. Open communication between family members strengthens their relationships and contributes to the formation of a strong family. When problems arise in the family, strong relationships can be established by solving them together and understanding each other. Communication between family members strengthens their feelings and relationships. Personal development of family members is also important for forming a strong family. Each family member should have the opportunity to realize their personal goals and dreams. Personal development of family members strengthens relationships and creates a healthy family atmosphere. Mutual support between family members promotes their personal development and serves to form a strong family.[10; 7-b]

During the process of forming a family, it is also necessary to strengthen mutual respect and trust between family members. Mutual respect between family members strengthens their relationships and contributes to the formation of a strong family. Trust within the family further strengthens the relationships between family members. Mutual trust between family members strengthens their relationships and contributes to the formation of a strong family. The relationship between family and society has always been of great importance in human history. The family, as the fundamental social group in the life of every person, plays a vital role in shaping their upbringing, moral values, and personality. The relationships between family members, their love, respect, and support for one another are fundamental factors in preparing a person for public life. The family is not only the main foundation of personal life but also the fundamental component of society. The processes of upbringing and education within the family, as well as social values and traditions, in turn, ensure the stability of society. Moral norms and social values, passed down from generation to generation through the family, shape the overall culture of society. Society, in turn, provides the family with an expanded social environment. Family members interact with various social strata and find their place in public life. The economic, political, and cultural conditions of society directly impact family life. For example, economic difficulties affect family well-being, and political changes can alter a family's legal and social status. The relationship between family and society is complex and dynamic. Problems that arise within the family, such as mutual misunderstandings, financial difficulties, or educational difficulties, can cause broader social problems in society. Therefore, it is necessary to develop social programs and policies aimed at improving family-society relations, ensuring social stability, and increasing family well-being. Overall, the relationship between family and society is a mutually reinforcing and mutually shaping process. The family is the foundation of personal and social development, and society provides the necessary conditions for family development. This interdependence between family and society is essential for the formation of a stable and prosperous society.

Conclusion and suggestions

Thus, the philosophical and aesthetic issues of building a strong family are extremely important in modern society. Family relationships, moral values, aesthetic environment, and educational processes are the main factors determining its strength. Family is a vital part of a person's life, and its strength and stability influence the development of society. When forming a family, each person must recognize their responsibility and strive to strengthen relationships between family members. This is essential for improving the family environment and ensuring its stability. Family is a vital part of a person's life, and its strength and stability influence the development of society. Therefore, the issue of building a strong family is important for everyone, and it is essential to move in this direction.

Links:

1. Jumaniyazov, O. "Family and Social Values". Tashkent: Science and Technology-2021, p. 156.
2. Toshpulatov, M. Family education: philosophy and practice. Samarkand: Samarkand State University, 2022, p. 124.
3. Kholmiraev, A. Family and its aesthetic aspects. Bukhara: Bukhara State University, 2020, p. 232.
4. Saidov, R. Family and society: a philosophical view. Tashkent: National University of Uzbekistan, 2023, p. 186.
5. Ruziev, A. Family and Man: Philosophical Thought. Andijan: Andijan State University, 2021, p. 210.
6. Turaev, S. "Family aesthetics: history and time". Karshi: Karshi State University-2022, p. 146.
7. Anvarov, D. "Family and Moral Values." Nukus: Karakalpak State University-2023, p. 179
8. Yuldashev, J. "Family and its philosophical problems." Fergana: Fergana State University, 2020, p. 181
9. Murodov, E. "Family, aesthetic and moral values." Tashkent: National University of Uzbekistan, 2022, p. 157
10. Sultanov, B. "Family and social development: philosophical approaches". Jizzakh: Jizzakh State University – 2023, 256 p.